Following a large range of controversial policy topics during the Trump administration’s first year in office, transatlantic cooperation remains a key component of international politics. From the COP 23 climate negotiations to trade agreements and intergovernmental military alliances such as NATO, democracies on both sides of the Atlantic depend on close communication and joint decision-making. Jürgen Hardt, MdB, will share his views of transatlantic cooperation in the age of Trump – to be followed by a discussion moderated by Prof. Dr. Sabine Sielke and Dr. Peter Schniering.
